WHAT IS A CRISIS OF MEANING?

Meaning is how we give life personal purpose. It is the mindset that expresses how our soul speaks through our being into our life expression. Meaning is our ability to embody and express the bigness of who we are in heart and spirit. When we feel our meaning, we are aligned with the most joyful expression of ourselves on every level—physically, mentally, emotionally, spiritually, socially—ready to soar our soul's dominion. Meaning gives context to life and explains why things happen as they do through our personal perspective which, over time, becomes locked in as paradigms or belief systems.

Meaning gives life purpose, animating and energizing daily activities and experiences. Meaning does not have to be grandiose; instead, it can be simple pleasures like making someone (including self) happy. Whatever the meaning someone assigns to their life, it becomes their identity and makes life worth living.

Unfortunately, many people reach their 40's, 50's, or 60's feeling disconnected from their personal meaning. They float through their days following their routines—engaged, busy, productive, and active—without the dynamic creativity and sense of fulfillment that comes with the certainty of knowing their life matters.

A crisis of meaning means, by opposition, losing one's bearings in life and no longer finding the meaning in what they are doing or who they are being. It could be their old meaning no longer satisfies them or has become obsolete. For example, parents with empty nest syndrome need to find new meaning or people who have become successful through hard work know how to strive but don't know how to live with their new level of success—it just isn't what they thought it would be. Or life's circumstances are surfacing a gap between where they are and where they know they could be but they don't know how to resolve (or sometimes identify) the patterns that keep them stuck.

A crisis of meaning can also be triggered by critical life events, such as a significant illness, divorce, business or job shift, or other failure that link with loss. The sense of incoherence about life's circumstances lead to questioning life's purpose.

Viktor Frankl used the term 'crisis of meaning' in the book Man's Search for Meaning; he was the founder of Logotherapy, which emphasizes finding and nurturing a sense of meaning in life. Frankl was a Holocaust survivor who credited his survival with the need to see his wife again, a quest that gave meaning to his existence in the camp. He observed that other camp victims who had no meaning beyond survival were the ones most likely to die. Throughout his time in the camp, he focused on seeing his wife again to get him through the experience; upon release, he learned his wife had not survived. That was his crisis of meaning where he needed to find a new meaning to life so he could keep going.

WHAT DOES A CRISIS OF MEANING LOOK LIKE TODAY?

There are many different forms of a crisis of meaning. For example, you might be feeling that you've been successful but don't feel like it or know what's missing. You might think things are ok but know they could be great and don't know how to bridge that gap. Or you might not understand why "this" keeps happening or why you can't figure "it" out on your own.

One of my clients said she "didn't know what she was doing wrong." And that's the thing—you're not doing it wrong! But it is an invitation to do something different to feel the juice of life again.

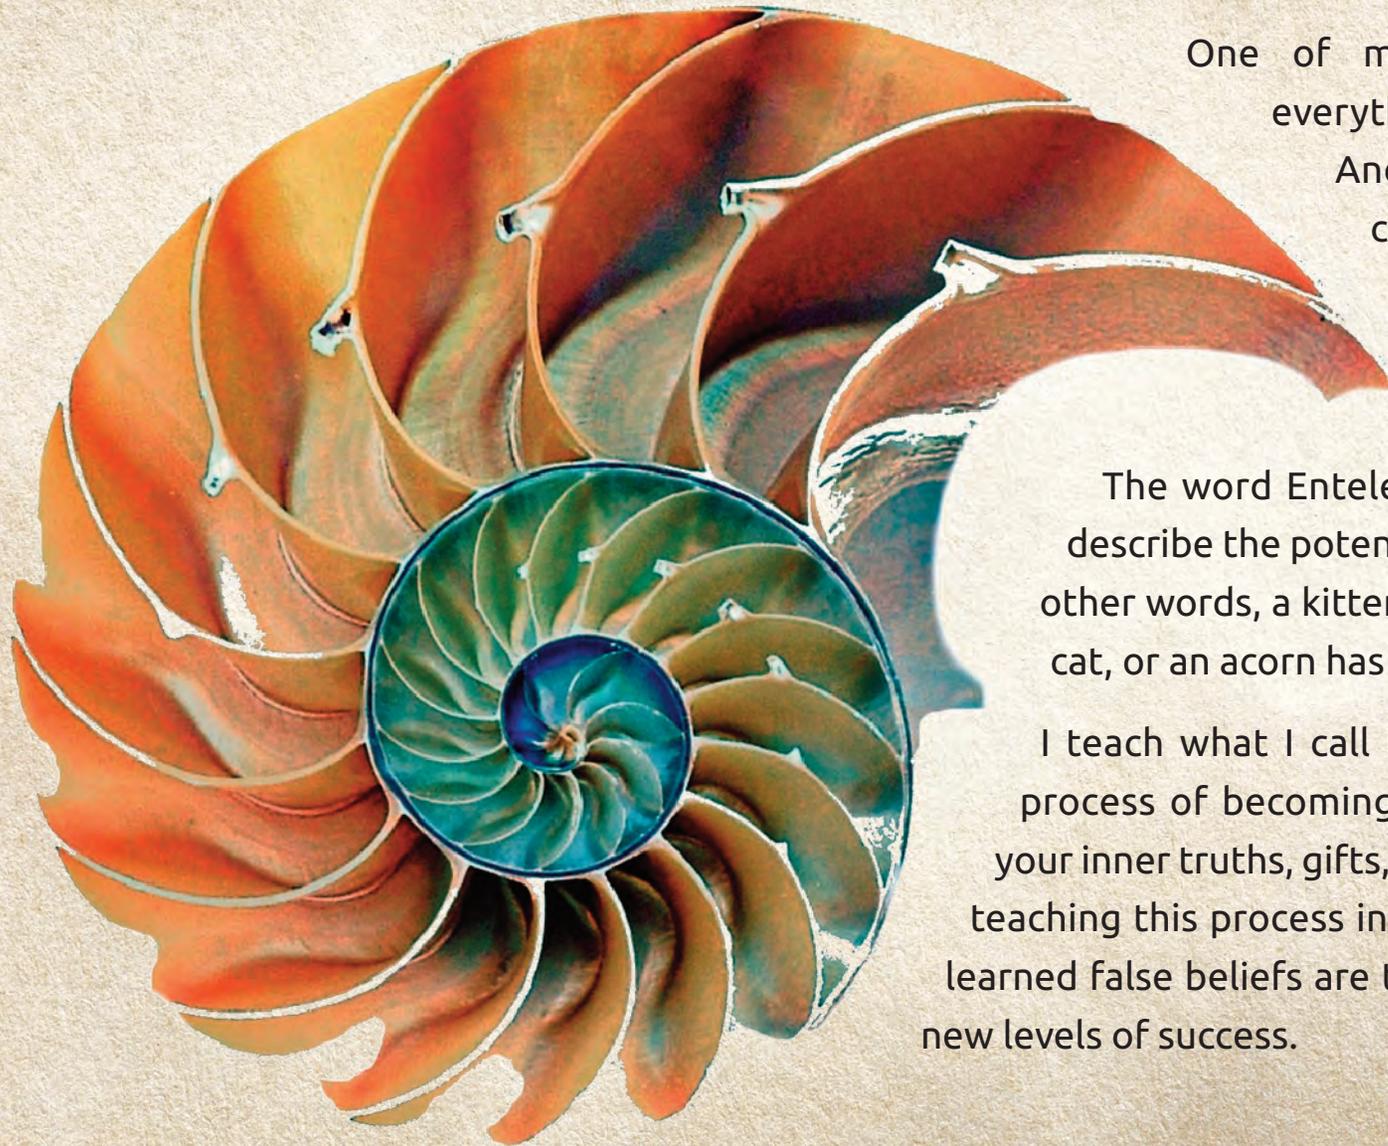

Another client described it as his needs are covered, his family is provided for, but something was missing—there should be "more" at this point. So a crisis of meaning can be where you aren't getting the results you wanted or expected by now.

There might be a strong compulsion to fill the gap between where you are and where you want to be to feel the fullness of your success more completely. Or maybe you've lived "between the lines" but feel the fire to be / do / have "more."

If you feel there is a next level of success or greater happiness and fulfillment waiting for you, you might be experiencing a personal crisis of meaning. And that's where my unique set of skills and gifts can help—but more on that later.

FALSE BELIEFS THAT PREVENT BECOMING

One of my core philosophies is that everything happens for our growth. And because I teach something called “Entelechy,” growth can often mean releasing what no longer holds relevance for you for next-level being-ness.

The word Entelechy was coined by Aristotle to describe the potential of a thing becoming itself. In other words, a kitten has the entelechy to become a cat, or an acorn has the entelechy to become a tree.

I teach what I call Human Entelechy, which is the process of becoming more of yourself by revealing your inner truths, gifts, and personal meaning of life. By teaching this process in various ways since 1998, I have learned false beliefs are the surest prison guards against new levels of success.

Following is a list of false beliefs you may have, even unconsciously, that have the power to keep you stuck, or small, as you are currently experiencing (or you wouldn't be reading this right now).

- You create your results based on current circumstances and what you think can / should have vs. what is possible from your true, expanded potential.
- You believe others' opinions and judgements. You are limited in creating fresh results by thinking you are too old, by making "rational" decisions, or by loyalty to your current career path.
- You believe it's your job to take care of others' expectations / maintain others' comfort zones.
- You have low "having-ness," meaning you don't allow yourself to truly have or enjoy what you've worked so hard for, which is also known as "insufficient reward syndrome." (You've worked so hard for so long without enough reward that it has—literally—changed your brain chemistry.)
- You confuse challenges (to grow through) with obstacles (that have the power to stop you).
- You don't know how to interpret life with a positive lens.
- You believe you are stuck with what you have at a certain point in life, that you need to live the consequences of your decisions, that you cannot change / leave behind what you've created up until now, that life is "good enough" even if it's not exactly what you want.
- You believe change might cause your world to fall apart / let others down.
- You believe somebody else has already done what you want to do so there's no point to you doing it now.
- You have to give your best without receiving in kind.
- You are blind to your "distortions," meaning you can't see what's in your way or how your Belief Systems (BS) aren't serving you anymore.

Unfortunately, this list is not all-inclusive—you might have an exponential number of permutations that are limiting what you think you can have and are now causing a crisis of meaning on some level for you. It can be difficult to identify what's blocking your fulfillment and happiness because, often, these beliefs are created very early in life and are such a part of you that you don't recognize them anymore. They are patterns of perception that have become so ingrained that they are now a rooted belief and determine how you experience life.

It is possible to find and shift them on your own; in this case, you typically find them through opposition. In other words, you feel what you are feeling, then think through what it would be like to experience the opposite of the feeling you're having, and then consider what must be true for you to believe anything other than the second, more positive, experience.

That said, it can be very difficult to have this kind of self-honesty. Even more, even when you do, it can feel like you are betraying everything you know and, if what you know now isn't true, then there is a possibility that everything else you know could be wrong too. And that is a tremendous risk to take on your own because you can get more unexpected insights than you thought were there.

"There are many advantages to working with Lynn, but top of the list is her laser-like ability to ascertain how you and your company can make immediate shifts in how you present yourself and interface with your customers to increase sales. She rapidly helps you identify the SMALL things you can do to net BIG results. She also helps you cut through the self-imposed limitations that can get in the way. I know we never mean to limit ourselves, but it is so hard to avoid playing to our comfort and convenience zones. Lynn by nature is a catalyst so you will find things happen fast, and for the good."

~ Zohreh Yamin,
Owner of Management Consulting Firm

Going further, if you don't do something to interrupt your status quo, then next year and the year after will look exactly the same as this one.

- You will be in the same place with the same problems and same kind / level of results.
- You will feel unfulfilled and still lack robust happiness and deep contentment.
  - You will feel you are leaving opportunities on the table.
    - You will be passed over by others, meaning your peers will pass you by in living a rich and rewarding life, and your potential clients will never see your business solutions as an answer to their problems and needs.
    - You won't have the position of influence or leadership you want in life / business / industry.

I don't want to berate that point because already your mind is envisioning the negative future from that perspective. Instead, let's consider new possibilities.

RESOLVE TO EXPERIENCE YOUR ENTELECHY

By being proactive in resolving your crisis of meaning, you set yourself up for a different future. Here is a short list of what success looks like when you are free from the past and fulfilled by fully living your present.

- Next year, you will have different problems to solve, experience fresh results and enjoy new happiness.
- Next year, you will have an enhanced, deeper sense of fulfillment, fun, and freedom.
- Next year, you will find that new opportunities and relationships/connections, and revenues will predictably come your way.
- Next year, you will hold a position of influence and/or authority previously (seemingly) unattainable or vague.

You know more than anyone what life could be like when you can feel the richness of your being throughout your life. It can be amazingly therapeutic to give yourself eleven minutes to close your eyes and visualize it. See your life in full technicolor as you imagine what it feels like to be fully participating in every aspect of your life—with your work, family, friends, leisure time, environments (office and home), vacations and more. You can do this daily to support manifesting your vision.

My clients report that, after working with me for compelling clarity, they went from:

- Doing good to being and feeling great.
- Confused to clear.
- Insightful to impactful.
- Frustrated to free.

“Lynn is an exceptional coach and human being. She is amazingly creative, caring, bold and focused. She has multiple gifts and she integrates them all in favor of her clients. I recommend her above any other coach I have ever had for her expertise, wisdom, creativity, and human quality.”

~ Luz Mara Sande Waite,
Executive Coach

- Stuck or stagnant to flowing with dynamic creativity through life circumstances.

Even more, others perceive them differently as a result of our work together. Others see my clients as:

- More centered, grounded, powerful, and insightful.
- Happier and more free (which is magnetically attractive); more flexible, adaptive, and resilient.
- More authentic and real (no distortions); living on purpose and able to articulate it.
- Having greater capacity to support others in living their authentic truths (even if only through inspiration).

Altogether, a crisis of meaning can be the key to living a better, richer, more rewarding future... when you resolve it the right way.

MY FIRST PERSONAL CRISIS OF MEANING

When I was about seventeen, I had my first crisis of meaning. What was I supposed to study? What degree should I get? What was I supposed to do with my life? I talked to guidance counselors, teachers, parents, store clerks, librarians and anybody standing still who might have an idea for me. I took multiple aptitude tests to find out what I was good at (including for the military, but that's another story).

Despite all my searching, I did not get any answers that felt right. It was frustrating. From my perspective, I was determining the course of the rest of my life and I wanted to do it right.

One morning while in bed between sleep and waking, I heard a voice. Nobody was there with me—but I distinctly heard a voice. It said, "actualize potential." What? I sat up to sort it out. The only clarity I had was a feeling around those words—they felt RIGHT. In that moment, I understood my unique purpose was to actualize potential.

Over the course of my life, that proved to be where I am most comfortable—in being a catalyst for transformation through compelling clarity. It started with friends and spread to acquaintances, then to people I would meet standing in lines, and then to colleagues. I found I had a talent for insight when it came to seeing current circumstances and identifying possibilities from it, then how to turn them into reality.

Professionally, I had a variety of jobs—everything from to ballroom dance instructor to restaurant manager to physician recruiter to temp agency manager—along with my own business born from people insisting they pay me for my clarity.

Eventually, I formalized that skills set and experience into a consultancy of sorts, working with entrepreneurs and business owners through various aspects of business-building. I became known for helping my clients accelerate their outcomes through a variety of tools, and more significantly, compelling clarity.

My clients have always said I bring an energy that infuses them with inspiration, and a perspective they couldn't see on their own. I love that.

As we worked together, they would ask me to turn my clarity into different forms to compress their learning curve—a thought leadership platform, a book, narrative copy they could use in marketing.

The end result was getting out of confusion, overwhelm and dissatisfaction; however, I never really knew what would come out of our work together because that would reveal through working the energy. So this work is less about my process and more about what's happening for my clients—and maybe for you.

I've been honing the skills needed to guide transformation and support self-mastery through compelling clarity for decades. Even more, I was born for it. I am a catalyst, an accelerator, a teacher... a transformationalist.

WHAT IF...

What if you knew the answers to the questions that underlie your current circumstances and how you feel about them...?

- Who am I here to be?
- Where am I out of alignment? (Why don't I feel fulfilled?)
- How can I be happier / have more freedom?
- Why am I not getting the results I want / expect?

My work helps you answer these questions. In the largest sense, the greater truth is there is a more profound level of your inner potential just waiting to be tapped for your happiness and fulfillment now.

In the words of others who have experienced working with me...

"I greatly appreciated your time and attention when we met. You have an amazing ability to create a connection with your audience. I noticed you absorb information quickly and have an excellent ability to listen as well as seek to understand. I also felt compelled to overshare, which is so rare for me and speaks to your skills as an intuitive. The feedback you provided on my website was most valuable. You not only offered me constructive criticism, but also quickly identified the root cause of why my marketing is not converting—my lack of authenticity, which is holding me back. I see great value in your coaching skills."

~ Veronica Acevedo,
Feng Shui Expert

"As I began navigating the next Chapter for my career, she was actively involved with recommendations and challenged me to think "outside the box." Literally, six months later I am now a Best Selling Author."

~ Sandra Spurgeon,
Trial Attorney

"I expected to learn a few things to apply to my business to help me make some changes; what I received was so much more than that! Lynn is truly amazing. She helped me to see small and large changes that would make my business so much more effective. She used her intuition to say things in just the right way. She used her delightful loving presence to make me feel comfortable with every moment of our session. Working with her was a total pleasure and I learned more than I could have ever imagined. Lynn has changed my whole life and I highly recommend her and the amazing work that she does. Invest in Lynn Scheurell if you are ready to take your whole life to a higher level!"

~ Barbara Grace,
Divine Healer

"In the billion-dollar plus business consulting industry, "experts" abound, and yet few of these gurus have what it takes to truly make a long lasting or permanent change in their client's lives and work. Lynn's understated manner and quiet confidence do not do justice to her passion in helping people realize their goals. She is a powerhouse of knowledge and useful information that she puts to work immediately. Lynn rises above the crowd in all areas. She truly lives what she teaches. She is practical, level-headed, honest, organized and committed. She goes beyond the expected, creating new ideas and new ways to implement them beyond what she promises. She is a true catalyst who takes a person's creative idea or talent and makes positive results happen."

~ Bradley James,
Composer

"Lynn is the most talented coach I have ever met. Many people claim they are mentors, but very few walk their talk and live their work, especially with the level of integrity and authenticity that Lynn does. Her listening skills are second to none; this coupled with her kind heart and savvy life skills makes her the one you want in your corner. With every session, I became not only crystal clear with my action plan, but I knew exactly what needed to be done! Lynn mentors with heart and her head. She gives a bit of theory and a LOT of practical application so you not only get the why, you get the how—and that is a VERY rare combination in this world."

~ Viki Viertel, Entrepreneur

"I'll forever be grateful and remember the day I declared myself an artist. Thanks for helping me discover the artist within—that was the best-ever 3-day intense coaching "business plan" that never happened! Lol!!!

*~ Jacque Weiss,
Whimsy Artist*

"Lynn, I have to say you are so the g-word—"guru." As I see it, you use your light to help illuminate the light within others and you meet them where they are to do so, even when their bulbs are dim! But all of us can shine bright—we just get covered with the dust of life and we need our catalyst (aka g-word) {def: guru} to help us sweep it off. Thank you for helping me change my life.

*~ Michelle Newbon,
Content Producer*

"As the saying goes (paraphrased by Maslow, I believe), if the only tool in your toolbox is a hammer, everything looks like a nail. Which is 180 degrees from what you do. You have a full tool box and choose the appropriate tool for the job... and you change tools when necessary, as many times as it takes, as the nail turns into a screw becomes a staple. In general, people cannot even begin to comprehend what you actually do in following someone's energy and dancing with them, because it is so far outside the realm of the familiar and not even on people's radar as possible. What you offer is vastly different... despite plenty of searching and hearing some similar, or even identical words, people don't get what you offer... empowerment, feeling heard and responded to, not talked to or given advice or suggestions. You mirror one's highest self, one's best unshrouded energy around a topic so a person can grow. And the only way you can do that is to be ego-less and allow someone to see Source through you and to feel it in oneself. And the person is forever changed and charged, and differently responsible for oneself, regardless of what s/he chooses to do with the experience and shift afterward. There isn't a product in the world that does that. Another big difference about what you do is that you teach from where your "student" is, not from where you are. You rock. You are amazing. I am so, so, so honored to be here with you in this physical time and space experience. Namaste, in the truest, most non-cliche sense of that word."

Chiropractor*

THIS IS HOW WE WORK TOGETHER

I help successful achievers resolve personal crises of meaning that occur once they've "made it" so they can have "more" (meaning purpose, fulfillment, and happiness). Another outcome of our work together is actualizing their next-level success based on previously untapped inner resources and newly surfaced truth. I do this by teaching metaphysical literacy for compelling clarity, transformation, and self-mastery. We look for patterns so we can decode them together.

By releasing the non-supportive blocks, barriers, and paradigms, my clients reach new and often unexpected vistas of achievement on multiple levels both personally and professionally.

I honestly do not know what it will take for you to feel the incredible fullness of your being or experience greater life happiness and satisfaction by resolving your crisis of meaning. But I know you do—you just need a proverbial key to access that insight for new momentum, upgrading who you thought you were to who you are, and unleashing your potential for next-level success. Our work together can be that key.

The truth of who you are will not tolerate being overwhelmed, side-lined, or distracted from your most amazing life. Challenges activate your potential so you can have more freedom. This moment of personal crisis of meaning is both your challenge and your invitation to grow beyond your comfort zone through compelling clarity.

When it feels right for us to work together, know I am a translator for the messages you're already receiving. You have the answers but they are not clear to you; I am a clarifier without attachment or judgement to your circumstances or final decisions. That means we will have a lot of meaningful dialogue without a cookie-cutter agenda. Our only intention is to help you transcend to the success you really want through purposeful clarity and positive action.

The most effective format is to go all-in for an in-person 2.5-day Sanctuary experience with me. There are other options, of course; however, this kind of immersion into your energy typically gets accelerated results for my clients.

Ideally, you will travel so we can meet in-person and get out of your typical routine; however, we can do this experience virtually as well. My clients have come from all over the world, including Denmark, Sweden, France, India, Mexico, and throughout the United States. Often my clients like to do Friday evening through Sunday afternoon but that is flexible, depending on what works best for you. My goal is to make it easy for you to have the success you want in a short period of time. Here's a sample of what you'll get...

I get to know you and your definition of success through an in-depth 60–90 minute session that clarifies your vision and distills our focus for your Sanctuary experience. You will leave Sanctuary with crystallized insight, an action plan, and likely a feeling of personal transformation (which some describe as feeling lighter or freer than when they arrived).

Next is the Sanctuary experience, which is an evening spent focusing on our outcomes, then a day of exploring and interpreting your energy and messages. For me, this is the 'taught' teachings day where we cover principles and metaphysical teachings as applied to your current circumstances. It is common for a lot of emotional energy to surface and connect the proverbial dots of different experiences.

For example, one client who had a real issue with details realized she had been criticized heavily in her childhood for missing details. Another client realized that downplaying his public persona started when school kids made fun of him for being different. The very thing that was his edge for success was the thing he most limited out of fear of ridicule. Another client wanted to become a thought leader but did not realize the value of her experiences as a story, one that eventually became a best-selling book; even more, she started negotiations for the film rights as well.

The final day, or 'caught' teachings day where we surf the energy now present, is when we clarify next action steps relevant to our initial outcomes and what we learned during the previous 1.5 days. That might be a business or marketing plan, the outline of a book, a new income strategy, a list of priority conversations that need to be had, a new business commitment or something unknown until it happens. This is when we bring it all together as your next-level foundation for personal mastery.

Some of my clients have reported that so much happened during Sanctuary it took a few weeks, months or even years for the full impact to unfold. It's common for client to return home, get rolling with fresh action, and find themselves inundated with unexpected wonderful opportunities and invitations as a result of their revitalized energy. In the case of the would-be author, she got invited to be a keynote speaker about the book on her flight home! Things can change very quickly where there is new perception and an opening to receive new connections.

Finally, we have an integration session that takes place a few weeks after you've returned to your normal environment. During this session, we cover what has come up since Sanctuary—obstacles, loose ends, endings, ideas, or questions. We can also explore on-going collaboration if that feels supportive.

So what happens when Sanctuary is complete? That is entirely up to you. My life purpose is to be available to help make connections, solve challenges, inspire new insights, and support focused action through compelling clarity. We can talk about what it looks like to work together at that point. This is not to be mysterious!!!! Rather, this is my commitment to allowing the energy to guide action in the moment. I do not have a big-box cookie-cutter program because each person has unique combinations of events, circumstances, beliefs, fears, opportunities, growth paths, and more. I simply don't know what you will want or need until we get to that point.

The most common thing I hear from my clients is their lives are forever changed in the best possible ways after a Sanctuary experience. They have, in some way, glimpsed the power of who they are with unrelenting clarity. As a result, things are different going forward—there is just no other option. They have greater purpose, accelerated results, and feel a greater sense of fulfillment.

Now is the only time and place where you can actively participate in personal awareness and the positive change choices that shape your life. By honoring what is 'right' for you, you create a dynamic that opens your most important asset—your life force energy.

YOUR INVESTMENT

Too often, the most important things in life defer to the more urgent things in life. As in, your happiness pales when compared to getting through daily priorities like getting food on the table or getting the car in for service. And yet, when people are interviewed on their deathbed, they say their regrets are of not living their fullest life.

So is focusing on your personal transformation to increase your sense of being urgent? Maybe not. But is it the key to living a richer and more rewarding life that feels worth living? Absolutely. What is the price of personal transformation to live your best life? My answer to you is that it's relative—and it doesn't really matter when you feel the pull toward something better.

My philosophy is that we get hung up on money because it now holds the equivalent meaning of life today; that is, without money, it's hard to survive in the western world. And yet, every person I've ever asked has said that they have always had the resources for what they wanted when they needed it. By virtue of being here now, every person has—somehow—had the resources needed to make it another day, then another day. Money is an energy. (In fact, I wrote a book on the metaphysical meaning of money... but I digress.)

The point is that the more money a person has, the less value it usually holds. Living a rich life is not about money but about being in a rewarding experience. In the absence of feeling life as rewarding and meaningful, it's hard to feel successful much less engaged with dynamic creative energy that is our natural birthright.

Many high-achievers reach a point of burn-out and their lives reflect that in relationships, lifestyle, physicality, and chosen work. Or they have "made it" but it doesn't feel like they thought it would... or they don't know why they aren't making it the way they expected. Any of those experiences can feel constrictive and devoid of light (which is how I see positive life force energy). And each is a form of a personal crisis of meaning.

At this point, you have four options available to you.

ONE: Do nothing different.

We have already covered the cost of not doing something different—essentially, your tomorrow, your next year, your next decade will look fundamentally the same as today. We also considered how your experience could change by taking new action. The question becomes: “What’s the best possible thing that can come out of this if you say ‘yes’?” If the answer is you’re going to shift your focus and keep getting what you want, what’s holding you back?

TWO: Do what you can on your own.

There are times when “do it yourself” is not a good approach, especially when you are both the object and the subject of your learning process. Just like an eyeball cannot see itself, it will likely be very difficult for you to see your own patterns. By now, they are so intrinsic to your way of being that it is like they are part of your anatomy. All the books, videos, seminars, and self-teaching tools will bring you some new insight but it will take a long time and you may not ever be able to be objective enough to see your deepest potential through your “invitations to growth” (aka, challenges).

THREE: Work with a coach.

Coaches are, by definition, experts in helping you get to new levels of performance. However, this is not a performance-to-be-honed issue. Coaches can be an incredible resource... however, their focus is usually on a particular technique or strategy vs. reading your energy field to gain relevant metaphysical insight. Even more, coaches tend to specialize and often haven’t had a broad field of experience from which to draw clarity. While you may find a coach you resonate with, if the stuck or stagnant energy or Belief System (B.S.) is lurking, their ability to help you resolve your personal crisis of meaning will be limited.

FOUR: Work with Lynn.

Join Lynn in your personal Sanctuary experience to collaborate on achieving your next-level success through compelling clarity gained through metaphysical insight and practical action. Your vision and experience will be the only agenda. You will have a completely unique experience designed only for you. While we don't know what it looks like until we create it together, it will be what is needed to support you in transforming, reinventing, and revitalizing your life so you have "more."

What now? Determine whether it's worth 20-ish minutes of your time to have a discovery conversation with Lynn, then book it at:

<https://calendly.com/savvyx/15min>

We'll talk through your vision of what you want for your life, where your untapped potential might be hiding, and explore our potential fit in working together. Naturally, there is no obligation to move forward in any way beyond this conversation. However, if it feels right, we'll obviously talk through options.

As you operate from a place of deep inner strength and clarity, you engage the universal law of cause and effect. You cannot help but create profoundly powerful results in your life... it is the only possible outcome.

In any case, make a decision and then make the decision right. Align your energy with what you have decided to do. If you've read this far, something is pulling you for shift so make a decision to either stay as-is or go for your next level. If you don't move forward, great! Then enjoy what "is" today and every day after.

And if you feel the importance of doing something different to be more present in your life going forward, book the call. Either way, decide one way or the other so you can move on with either path you choose... either way will be better than staying stuck in not taking action but wanting something different.

Here's to upleveling your success through self-transformation and compelling clarity in a unique, engaging way that will sing to your soul.

ABOUT THE STATE OF BECOMING

*T*he State of Becoming is devoted to helping high achievers use compelling clarity for self-transformation based on entelechy, or revealing essential potential, so they can experience “more”—purpose, fulfillment, and happiness.
